

WEEK'S HIGH SPOTS SEEN THROUGH CARL T. THONER'S CAMERA

Here is another of the reasons why men run for Congress. These are some of the sights on Washington streets. These are the Three Graces downstairs. Washington—the convention city. Oh, boy! There's a reason.

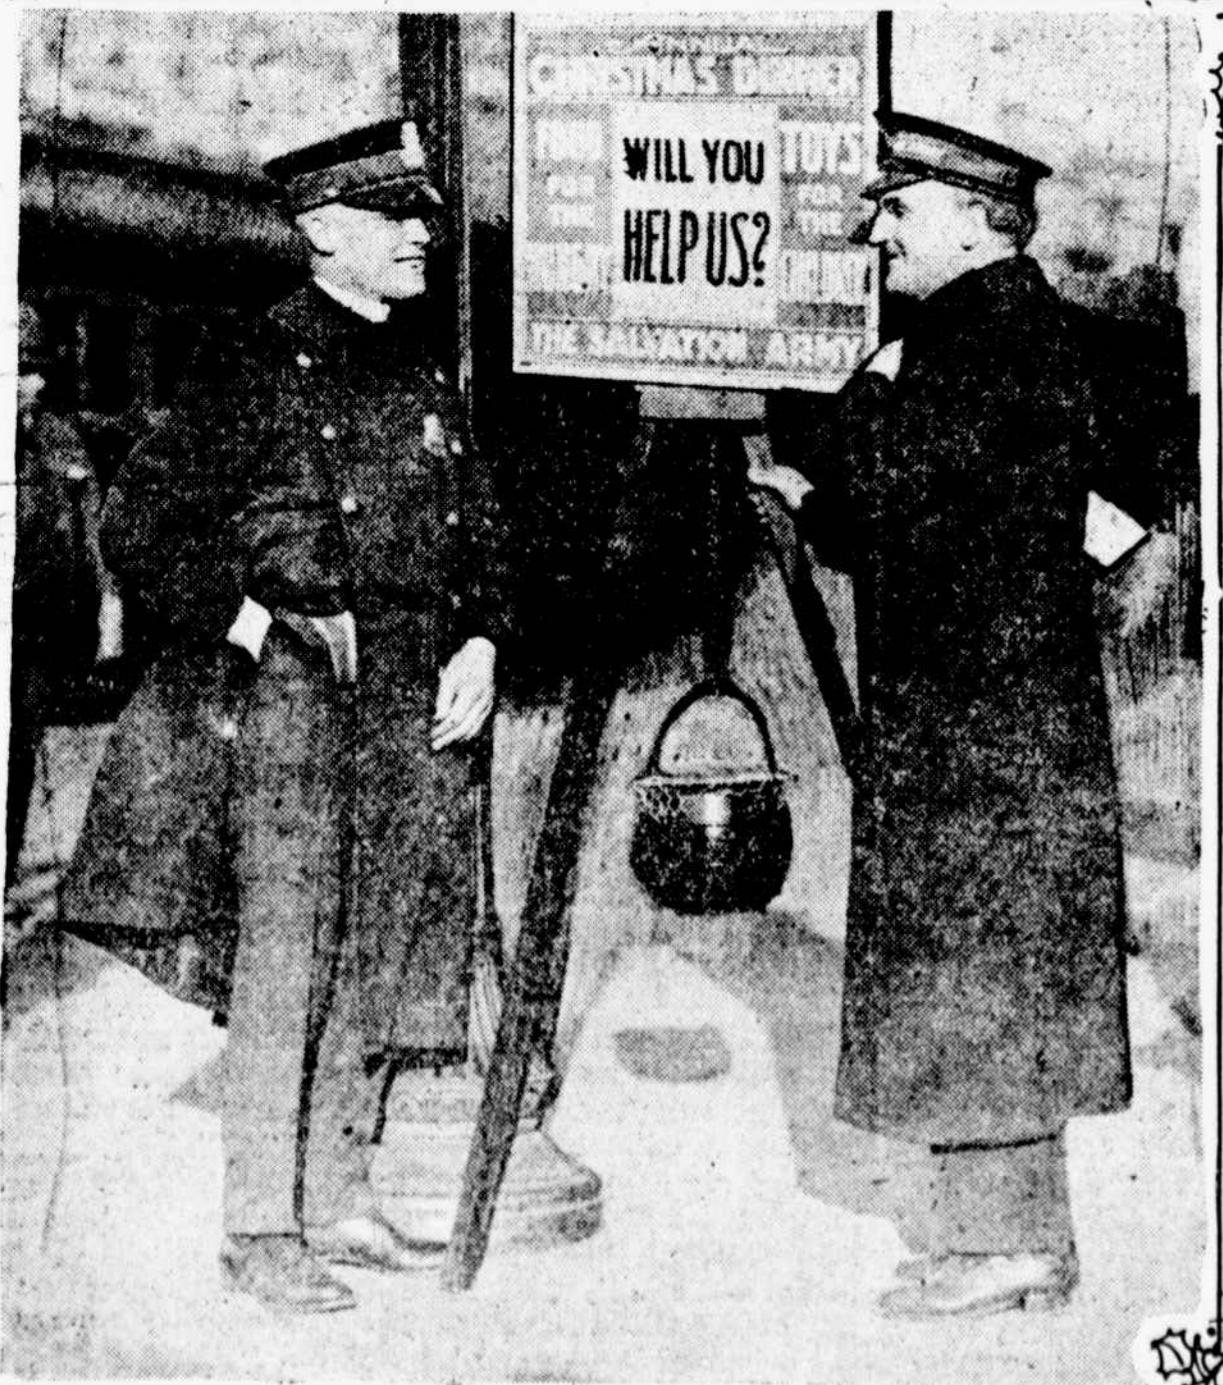

The little girl is doing some "eye shopping." Her feet are expressing violent longing. Yes; her nose is flattened against that window. Mother is feeling around to see if she can spare the price.

Even the infants are helping the good cause along. This kiddie probably thought that if he dropped a penny down the chimney Santa Claus would come out. Anyway, he is looking down the flue for him. He will be decidedly disappointed, though the folks at the receiving end of the chimney are enjoying it.

One of the reasons why Washingtonians are glad to get back home after a trip to "the States." They don't have the vote, it's true, but there are compensations.

Cops don't ordinarily have money to throw away. This one isn't feeling any too wealthy. He isn't giving anything away, however. No; he is purchasing some real Christmas happiness. His money will be well spent.

Unlimbering the old wallet in a good cause, he realizes that it may make his wallet thinner, but it will make his heart feel stouter and that is enough to make up the difference. If you will look around you can find this same kettle and experience that heart fattening feeling, too.

Santa Claus in disguise. He is showing that his heart does beat for the little children before Christmas as well as on that happy day. He is saying, for the benefit of passersby, "Young man, go thou and do likewise."
